A Word From the Publisher

Mother Nature intruded upon business in 2011 in a way that could alter for many years how many companies manage their increasingly far-flung supply chains and just-in-time distribution strategies, according to several logistics executives.

These executives said they are fielding more inquiries from shippers about moving production out of Asia and lining up additional sources of raw materials and components to avoid the kind of disruptions that occurred following the earthquake and tsunami in Japan.

“Companies are hedging their bets,” said Jim Monkmeyer, managing director of supply-chain engineering for Salt Lake City-based England Logistics, which ranks No. 41 on our latest TRANSPORT TOPICS Top 50 list of the largest logistics companies in the United States, Canada and Mexico, based on revenue.

Stephen Dean, senior vice president of sales and marketing for Miami-based Ryder Supply Chain Solutions, No. 5 on the TT Logistics 50 list, said one company — a U.S.-based electronics manufacturing firm — halted plans to move all of its production to Singapore and instead plans to set up plants in both Mexico and Singapore.

“Companies with complex global and extended supply chains are more cognizant of disruptions, whether it’s a port strike or earthquake,” Dean said. “They’ve learned through hardship that they need to have contingency plans to keep their business up and running.”

The potential for supply-chain disruptions wasn’t limited to faraway places. In North America, floods inundated highway bridges and rail lines in the Upper Midwest and later affected parts of northern Mexico, while an outbreak of tornadoes in the spring devastated parts of the Southern United States, flooding from hurricanes plagued portions of the East Coast and a rare October snowstorm buried parts of the Northeast.

“If companies aren’t making changes, they will do so soon,” said Robert Lieb, a professor of supply-chain management at Northeastern University in Boston.

To protect supply networks, Lieb said, companies are expanding the number of suppliers they use and are keeping more critical materials in inventory to guard against costly production shutdowns and running out of merchandise.

“If you look at the money lost [because of plant shutdowns], it dwarfed the savings from inventory reductions,” Lieb said in an interview with senior features writer Daniel P. Bearth.

George Abernathy, president of Transplace Inc., Frisco, Texas, said customers are looking at expanding the number and location of distribution centers.

“Getting product closer to the customer gives them the ability to react if there is a disruption,” he said.

Perhaps the most significant change resulting from recent supply-chain disruptions is a greater willingness of shippers to collaborate with carriers, said Robert Byrne, chief executive officer of Terra Technology, Norwalk, Conn., a company that supplies software for sales forecasting and transportation planning.

Against this backdrop of contingency planning, overall spending on logistics services is accelerating as business activity continues to recover from the global economic downturn in 2009.

Gross revenue for third-party logistics service providers in the United States increased 18.9% to $127.3 billion in 2010 from $107.1 billion in 2009 and is projected to top $141 billion in 2011, according to a report by Armstrong & Associates, Stoughton, Wis.

The 2011 TRANSPORT TOPICS Top 50 Logistics Companies list also reveals a trend toward consolidation, with Ryder Supply Chain Solutions (No. 5) and Genco ATC (No. 7) each making acquisitions of companies on the Top 50 list a year ago. Ryder purchased Total Logistic Control (No. 37 in 2010) and Scully Distribution Services (No. 50 in 2010). Genco Supply Chain Solutions acquired ATC Logistics & Electronics (No. 32 in 2010).

The debut of Total Quality Logistics (No. 45) on the 2011 Top 50 list also is significant. The Cincinnati-based brokerage firm represents a new breed of aggressive, sales-oriented freight brokerage firms that are making a name for themselves in a segment of the logistics industry long dominated by C.H. Robinson Worldwide (No. 6).
